Why Some People Live Long.

Is there a microbe of longevity? It would really seem so from the diversity of causes ascribed by aged people to account for their long lives. Sir Isaac Holden, an ancient man who lately died in England, said he owed the prolongation of his existence to his abstinence from bread. Thomas Whittington lived to 101 years and never drank any liquid except ardent spirits. A centenarian smuggler said his prescription for long life was "wet feet every day and drink every night."

"You have seen Jones's wife? What is she like? Would you call her pretty?"
"I might if I were talking to Jones."—Exchange.

His Overwhelming Sufficiency.

"Pardon me, sir," began the inquisitive passenger, bending in a confidential way over the back of the seat before him, "but what—"

"Adam was the first man," replied the dyspeptic looking man in front, in a cold, gray monotone.

"Moses was the meekest man, there never was any meekest woman. Columbus discovered America. John Hancock signed the Declaration of Independence. In the winter of 1847 and 1848 potatoes formed almost the sole food of the Irish peasantry. We are indeed all hurrying on toward eternity. White sheep eat more than black ones because there are more of them. A door is not a door when it's ajar. Schley's name is pronounced 'Sly,' and golf is 'gorf.' It is highly improper to wear a silk hat with a sack coat. There never was such a person as the Ahkond of Swat. The greatest weakness of the American people is signing petitions without reading them. Yes, it is a good morning and I have used everybody's soap. I—"

"Excuse me! But—er—er—what are you trying to—ah—get at?" interrupted the inquisitive one, much astonished at the reply his attempt had precipitated.

"The foregoing information," was the grim answer, in the same accentless voice, "is all I know about anything of any name or nature—Biblical, historical, statistical, biographical, geographical, conundrums or otherwise—past, present or future, now and forever! I don't know anything else of any kind, character, style, shape, or color, good, bad or indifferent. I not only do not know anything else, but I don't want to. My name is William Sufferin Smith; I am forty-three years old and a widower. I have the following relatives, or, rather, they have me—namely, one mother-in-law, who was born to command; three brothers-in-law, who were born to be hanged, but have thus far escaped; two maiden sisters-in-law of the vintage of 1842. Since the death of my wife these several relatives have lived on me like a pack of cannibals. My mother-in-law is sure my wife would have been alive now if it had not been for my conduct. My brothers-in-law have differed with and also from, me in politics and all other questions; they have worn my clothes, spent my money and treated me with contumely and derision. One of my sisters-in-law is stage struck, and the other has been subject to swooning spells for years. The whole outfit have ground into me their superior wisdom, their views of life and their preferences in everything; they have hen-pecked, flouted and abused me, world without end. Yesterday I laid my coat and hat on the bank of the river, swam across and disappeared in the woods, leaving my kith and kin to mourn me as dead. I am never going back unless I am overtaken and hypnotized. I don't know anything of interest to tell anybody, and I don't want to hear anything that anybody else has to tell. I want nothing in the world but peace. If you don't let me alone I'll throw my grip sack out of the window and jump after it. I have spoken!"

Thereupon the speaker with drew into his shell, leaving the inquisitive passenger in a state closely bordering on collapse.

Tom P. Morgan.
